

Your Path to Transitioning to Community

What is happening?

Over the next three years you and the people you live with will be supported to move to a home and a good life, in the community you choose, and with the help you need.

Why is this happening?

Disabled people, their families, and their supporters through the Disability Rights Coalition have won a discrimination court case where a judge has decided the government must do a better job of supporting people to live in the community and make choices for themselves. This means institutions will be closing, and people will have more choice over where and with who they live.

What does this mean for me?

You will be able to have a choice in where you live, who you want to live with, and how you live.

You will have lots of time and help to make your own plan.

You will be able to visit and explore different places to live, like a house or apartment.

Who will support me?

You will continue to receive the support you need.

You will be able to choose who supports you.

Will I get to see my friends when I move?

Yes! You will be able to see your friends after you move, and you will be able to make new friends in your new home.

When do I have to move?

You do not have to move right away. This change will happen over the next three years. You will have lots of time to get ready.

I don't want to move. Do I have to?

Yes, you will have to move, because the place you live in now will be closing. Change can be scary but can also be exciting. You will get to decide where you move, who you live with and how you spend your time.

If you have questions, talk to your friends and family, the people who support you where you live now, and most importantly, the Disability Support Program (DSP) Coordinator who will get to know you and help you with your plans.

Your Path to Transitioning to Community

Moving to community takes time.

We will need to get to know you really well.

We will need to talk with you about what you want, where you want to live, and what you would like to try.

You and your Coordinator will get to know each other well.

Talk about what is most important to you

Talk about what kind of supports you need

Talk about where you want to live and with who

Explore communities and neighbourhoods

Move into your new home

If you have questions, talk to your friends and family, the people who support you where you live now, and most importantly, the Disability Support Program (DSP) Coordinator who will get to know you and help you will your plans.